John E. Kirkpatrick was a man of generous spirit who cared about the welfare of people and organizations and felt others should as well. He was a visionary who was always thinking and planning for the future. Mr. Kirkpatrick was generous both with his own money and also in his encouragement of others to give. When he established the Oklahoma City Community Foundation in 1969, he created an opportunity for anyone to support charitable organizations and causes. In essence, he created the community's endowment.

At an early age, Mr. Kirkpatrick learned the importance of integrity, responsibility and independence. He would apply these values through all facets of his life as a Naval officer, businessman and philanthropist. Loved by those who knew him and respected by his business peers, his personal beliefs in hard work, thrift and patriotism were legendary.

Mr. Kirkpatrick would have celebrated his 100th birthday on February 13, 2008, so it is fitting that we honor his personal legacy of generosity and caring that will continue to benefit the community for generations.
